A MELODY

Picked up on Monday night last near Regent's Park

Air—"We Met."

We met—'twas nearly dark,
And the loveliest of places:
My friend, and his friend
Set us up at twelve paces.
We spoke—his words were few—
But he swore he'd not fumble—
Ah me; how queer I felt!
I thought I should tumble!

I wore my new white hat—
And I rival'd its whiteness!
And my old green silk cravat—
How I choked with its tightness!
I died before my time,
Accidentally—rather—
Oh! thou hast been the cause
Of this meeting, my father!

And once again I died,
Taking aim at his gullet;
And again my ball turned out
A right-down Irish Bull-fet.
I loaded yet once more;
For I thought I would frighten
My man; but I was wrong—
He's the devil for fightin'!

At last they "walk'd him off,"
And at Brookes's he'll tell it—
How before the word was given,
He flew by my lead pellet.
The Times may call me coward,
But henceforth I had rather
Not fight—I'll have a vow
Up in Heaven, like my Father!

IRVING'S VISIT TO ABBOTSFORD.

We copy below another extract from Mr Irving's interesting "Miscellanies"—it exemplifies the benevolent character and home-centred habits of Sir Walter Scott:—

 In a little while the "Lord of the Castle" himself made his appearance. I knew him at once by the descriptions I had read and heard, and the likenesses that had been published of him. He was tall, and of a large and powerful frame. His dress was simple and almost rustic: an old green shooting-coat, with a dog whistle at the buttonhole, brown linen pantaloons, stout shoes that tied at the ankles, and a white hat that had evidently seen service. He came limping up the gravel-walk, aided himself by a stout walking-staff; but moving rapidly and with vigour. By his side jogged along a large iron-gray staghound, of most grave demeanour, who took no part in the clamour of the canine rabble, but seemed to consider himself bound, for the dignity of the house, to give me a courteous reception.

Before Scott reached the gate, he called out in a hearty tone, welcoming me to Abbotsford, and asking news of Campbell. Arrived at the door of the chaise, he grasped me warmly by the hand: "Come, drive down, drive down to the house," said he; "You're just in time for breakfast, and afterwards ye shall see all the wonders of the Abbey."

I would have excused myself on the plea of having already made my breakfast. "Hut, man," cried he, "a ride in the morning in the keen air of the Scotch hills is warrant enough for a second breakfast."

I was accordingly whirled to the portal of the cottage, and in a few moments found myself seated at the breakfast table. There was no one present but the family, which consisted of Mrs Scott; her eldest daughter, Sophia, then a fine girl about seventeen; Miss Ann Scott, two or three years younger; Walter, a well-grown stripling; and Charles, a lively boy, eleven or twelve years of age.

I soon felt myself quite at home, and my heart in a glow, with the cordial welcome I experienced. I had thought to make a mere morning visit, but found I was not to be let off so lightly. "You must not think our neighborhood is to be read in a morning newspaper," said Scott; "it takes several days of study for an observant traveller, that has a relish for auld-world trumpery. After breakfast you shall make your visit to Melrose Abbey; I shall not be able to accompany you, as I have some household affairs to attend to; but I will put you in charge of my son Charles, who is very learned in all things touching the old ruin and the neighbourhood it stands in; and said he, and my friend, Johnnie Bower, will tell you the whole truth about it, with a great deal more, that you are not called upon to believe, unless you be a true and nothing-doubting antiquary. When you come back, I'll take you out on a ramble about the neighbourhood. To-morrow we will take a look at the Yarrow, and the next day we will drive over to Dryburgh Abbey, which is a fine old ruin, well worth your seeing."—In a word, before Scott had got through with his plan, I found myself committed for a visit of several days, and it seemed as if a little realm of romance was suddenly open before me.

He went on thus to call over names celebrated in Scottish song, and most of which had recently received a romantic interest from his own pen. In fact, I saw a great part of the border country spread out before me, and could trace the scenes of those poems and romances which had in a manner bewitched the world.

I gazed about me for a time with mute surprise—I may almost say, with disappointment. I beheld a mere succession of grey waving hills, line beyond line, as far as my eye could reach, monotonous in their aspect, and so destitute of trees, that one could almost see a stout fife walking along their profile; and the far-famed Tweed appeared a naked stream, flowing between bare hills, without a tree or a thicket on its banks; and yet, such had been the magic web of poetry and romance thrown over the whole, that it had a greater charm for me than the richest scenery I had beheld in England. I could not help giving utterance to my thoughts.

Scott hummed for a moment to himself, and looked grave; he had no idea of having his muse complimented at the expense of his native hills. "It may be pertinent," said he, at length; "but to my eye these grey hills and all this wild border country have beauties peculiar to themselves. I like the very nakedness of the land; it has something bold, and stern, and solitary about it. When I have been for some time in the rich scenery about Edinburgh, which is like ornamented garden land, I begin to wish myself back again among my own honest grey hills; and if I did not see the heather at least once a year, I think I should die!"

Our ramble took us on the hills commanding an extensive prospect. "Now," said Scott, "I have brought you, like the pilgrim in the 'Pilgrim's Progress,' to the top of the Delectable Mountains, that I may show you all the goodly regions hereabouts. Yonder is Lammermuir, and Smiltholme; and there you have Galashiels, and Torwoodlee, and Gala Water; and in that direction you see Teviotdale and the Braes of Yarrow, and Ettrick stream winding along like a silver thread, to throw itself into the Tweed."

The last words were said with an honest warmth, accompanied by a thump on the ground with his staff, by way of emphasis, that showed his heart was in his speech. He vindicated the Tweed, too, as a water stream in itself; and observed, that he did not dislike it for being bare of trees, probably from having been much of an angler in his time; and an angler does not like to have a stream overhung by trees, which embarrass him in the exercise of his rod and line.

I took occasion to plead, in like manner, the associations of early life for my disappointment in respect to the surrounding scenery. I had been so accustomed to see hills crowned with forests, and streams breaking their way through a wilderness of trees, that all my ideas of romantic landscape were apt to be well wooded.

"Ay, and that's the great charm of your country," cried Scott. "You love the forest as I do the heather; but I would not have you think I do not feel the glory of a great woodland prospect. There is nothing I should like more than to be in the midst of one of your grand wild original forests, with the idea of hundreds of miles of untrodden forest around me. I once saw at Leith an immense stick of timber, just landed from America. It must have been an enormous tree when it stood in its native soil, at full height, and with all its branches. I gazed at it with admiration; it seemed like one of the gigantic obelisks which are now and then brought from Egypt to shame the pygmy monuments of Europe; and in fact, these vast aboriginal trees, that have sheltered the Indians before the intrusion of the white men, are the monuments and antiquities of your country."

PRICE REDUCED.—Particular Notice to all Mechanics and others.

THE BOSTON MECHANIC and Journal of the Useful Arts and Sciences—No 84 a year only. This monthly periodical, having received essential aid in its publication from many mercantile and other liberal gentlemen of the city, and the Publishers being desirous of placing it in the hands of every Mechanic in New England, whether employer, journeyman or apprentice—have concluded to put the work in future at the exceedingly low price of One Dollar a year, (instead of $2, as heretofore.)

The Publishers trust this arrangement will be acceptable, not only to the present patrons of the MECHANIC, but to all whose interests such a work is calculated to promote. Much effort is now making by paying the best writers, and procuring good Engravings to illustrate the subjects treated upon, expressly for this work, to give it an interesting as well as substantial and highly useful character, and to make it valuable, especially to the Mechanics of New England, in every branch of their business—and also to Merchants and Manufacturers.

At the price above named, the MECHANIC is cheaper than any similar publication in the country—and will therefore require a large accession to its subscription list to sustain it. The efforts of any individuals to extend its circulation will be gratefully acknowledged. Editors will especially oblige us by giving as much publicity as possible to this notice.

The BOSTON MECHANIC has received the strongest testimonials of approbation from many of the most respectable Journals, and from the Massachusetts State Lyceum. We are especially gratified in being able to give such names in favor of the work as those of L. G. AMESBROOK, and the Honorable Mayor of our city, gentlemen who have always exhibited a deep interest in the improvement of Mechanics, and that of DANIEL TRIGGSWELL, Esq., whose scientific reputation is too well known to need comment.

We, the subscribers, consider the "Mechanic," and Journal of the Useful Arts and Sciences, a work highly meritorious and useful to Mechanics, and through them to the community at large; and we hope that its publication will be sustained.

SAMUEL T. AMESBROOK,
THOMAS LAYMAN, JR.,
DANIEL TRIGGSWELL.

The price of the work being so low, it will be necessary that payment be made in advance in all instances.

NOTICE.—ALEX

SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1835.

Election of President by the House of Representatives.—The Whigs avow openly that the object of all their labors is to bring the election of President into the House of Representatives, and, consequently, take it from the hands of the people, where it rightfully belongs. This, it seems to us, is rather strange doctrine to be advocated in a republican country. The New York Times has the following remarks upon the subject:—

"We wish to keep distinctly before the people the fact, that the Whigs are determined, if possible, to carry the Election of President into the House of Representatives. They despair of success with the people. They know the unpopularity of their cause. They feel that the people are not with them, and their calculations are based on the hope of outmanaging the people. One of their great idols, Tristram Burgess, who thanked God that he never was a democrat, has avowed that he trusts that an election of President may never be made in any other manner than by the House of Representatives, and there is not a Whig paper in the country that has disavowed his opinions. We ask the people—the voters of all parties—whether they intend to keep the power of electing a President in their own hands, or whether they are willing that it should be taken from them."

The election of President by the House of Representatives is indeed constitutional, but every one must regret the necessity of exercising it. When John Quincy Adams was elected President by the House of Representatives, General Jackson had received the highest number of votes given by the people. What was the consequence? The people, incensed, not only at the election of a man whom they had rejected, but at the manner of his election, and the bargain and intrigue by which it was brought about, determined that he should no longer occupy a place to which he had been elevated contrary to their will. That will they are determined to enforce, and the question now submitted to them is not merely whether they will elect the candidates of the Baltimore Convention, but whether they will retain the election in their own hands. Can any man in his senses question their decision for a moment?"

Enthusiasm.—They had hard work to raise the steam at the great Webster meeting in Worcester, it appears by Col. Merrick's letter. As an excuse for addressing the meeting, he says:—

"After Mr. Kimball had offered his resolutions, and made a very sensible and suitable speech in support of them, he sat down, and no one rose to continue the discussion. There was a dead pause; and the chairman several times solicited gentlemen to offer remarks on the subject before the meeting. During this interval, several gentlemen near me urged me to speak; and when I informed them that I was unprepared, they still insisted that I must. After waiting for such length of time that the pause seemed to grow embarrassing, and even painful, I rose and addressed the Chair."

This is a pretty correct specimen of the "unbounded enthusiasm" for Mr. Webster—it is all upon paper—he is a dead weight upon the shoulders of his partisans, but they feel that they "must" carry him.

Ohio and Michigan.—The joint committee of the Ohio Legislature have made a long report upon the boundary question, to which is appended a series of resolutions declaring the right of Ohio to the disputed territory, and her determination to support that right, "by any and every means which may be lawfully used by a free and independent State of this Union." The resolutions also provide that the Governor shall request the President of the United States to appoint a Commissioner or Commissioners, whose duty it shall be to meet with the Commissioners appointed on the part of the State, for the purpose of re-marking "Harris's line"—and in case the President should omit or decline so to do, the Governor is authorized to cause the same to be completed by Commissioners appointed by him. These resolutions were all adopted unanimously by the House, with the exception of that providing for the application of the President, against which 6 votes were cast. A bill has been reported to the House "to erect the county of Lucas," which was postponed, 37 to 34—on the other hand, the Senate have passed a bill appropriating $300,000, to be placed at the disposal of the Governor.

There is no fun stirring about these days—all is dull as dog days—John tells a good story once in awhile, however, of which the following is a sample:—

A couple of resurrectionists started for a subject one cold night, in a small covered wagon, and succeeded in finding one—when they had disinterred the body, they dressed it up in a frock coat, hat, &c. placed it between them in their wagon, and started for home. The weather being very cold, and coming in sight of a tavern, they concluded to stop and "take a drink," which they did, leaving their inanimate companion sitting erect upon his seat with the horse's reins lying in his lap—the ostler observing three individuals in the wagon when it was driven up, and noticing that but two went into the house, thought he would inquire of the third why he didn't follow his companions—so he walked up to the wagon and asked the reason for his remaining behind—no answer was returned—after questioning the dumb gentleman some time he took hold of him and found that his hand was upon a dead man! Although terrified at first, his mind soon solved the mystery, by recollecting that one of the individuals who was sipping toddy at the bar, was a medical student—"So," says the ostler, "I'll have some fun with these larks." He hoisted the body from the wagon and carried it into the stable, where he took off its clothes, put them on to himself, and then placed himself in the wagon; after a short time the students returned—one of them jumped up beside, as he supposed, his dead man, and in merriment, struck him upon his knee, exclaiming, "how would you like some flip my old fellow?" The moment the words had passed his lips, he observed to his companion in a low and trembling voice, "Ben he's warm!" This started Ben, but he recovered his self-possession in a moment, and after reproving his friend for frightening him unnecessarily, stepped up and touched the ostler himself; in an instant, choking with fear, he repeated what his companion had just said—"He is warm, by heaven!"—and so would you be," replied the ostler, in a measured and ghostly tone, "if you had just been stolen from him, as I have." The students took to their heels, and never returned to claim their horse or wagon.

A Small Affair.—A country editor, speaking of a cotemporary, says, "his soul is not large enough to fill the socket of a musket's eye."

"Prison Thoughts."—There is now confined in the Boston Jail, awaiting his trial at the Municipal Court, for stealing a diamond ring, from the store of John Bigelow, in State street, a very fine-looking young man, named William H. Edwards, but better known to the Police officers of New York and Philadelphia, by the familiar appellation of "Tom Ward," under which cognomen he has been shelled one season in a N. York Penitentiary, besides escaping conviction half-dozen times for pocket-picking, &c. He is quite a fancy dealer, and has generally shown a decided preference for jeweller's shops, as the theatre of his skillful operations, which are executed with singular adroitness. His professed mode of gaining a livelihood, has been by travelling through the country towns, and giving exhibitions in ventriloquism, slight-of-hand, and all the approved and admired feats of jugglery performed by crack conjurers. He now contributes much to the amusement of his fellow prisoners, in the middle arch, by his ventriloquism, and often dispels their ennui by the thunder of the lion's roar, or provokes them to unseemly, but not unwelcome mirth, by the mewling of a kitten.

But, poor fellow, he has been unfortunate, and deceived by his own partner, who, the night after his arrest, absconded from the city, carrying with him his trunk of cup and balls, and other implements of magic. But though deserted by friends and fortune, Fancy and the Spirit of Poesy still faithfully adhere to him, and in their sweet society, he finds his narrow cell an illimitable universe, in which he has ample room to dream dreams, and see visions of future happiness. Like his brother poet, Wordsworth, he finds "poetry its own exceeding great reward," and being furnished with writing materials, he whiles away the tedium of his confinement, by committing his "prison thoughts," like the famous Dr. Dodd, to paper. One of his effusions, in rhyme, we have rescued from oblivion: it is an imitation, or rather an improvement on, of the late Professor Frisbie's "Castle in the Air," commencing with—

"I'll tell thee, friend, what sort of wife,
When'er I scan this scene of life,
Inspires my waking schemes,
And when I sleep, with form so light,
Dances before my ravished sight,
In sweet aerial dreams."

"This is what I never have heard said
The lady that I'd wed—
Must be a kind and gentle one—
One that I would not frown upon
She must not be to tall—
Nor must she be to small—
She must be one that's lissom to
And one that's comely to the view
She must lady-like be—
Polite gentle and free—
Always courteous and deserving
Most gracious kind and loving
Her temper must be soft and cool
And never let her passion rule
She must not prove deceitful though
For then all her errors 'd see through
She must not be to fussy neither
Nor must she be a false deceiver
One that men would love to view
And one that no kindness never knew
She must not be a scold
Nor must she in my business be to bold
She must not be a flashy form
Nor must she in her passion be to warm
Nor like some maids that I once saw
Nor serpent like at men would wag
She must not another man be running after
For that I heat as the devil does holy water
She must be slim and delicate
With little hands and little feet
With a sweet bosom snowy white
With eyes dark but ever bright
With pretty pouting lips
With darke hair and rosey cheeks
She must not be to talkative
Nor must she be to disdaine
She must not cause her groom to grieve
Nor must she ere his heart deceive
This is not all I could say up a score
Besides this her's is the only thing more
But this I'll just suffice to say
That I will tell you them another day
Written and composed by Wm H. Edwards ventriloquist."

Who, after reading this gorgeous description of female excellence, coughed, as it is, in measured

—"notes with many a winding word
Of linked sweetness long drawn out,"

would not rather be a prisoner in chains, with a poetic genius capable of inditing it, than a free, but dull denizen, possessed of the liberty of the very winds, but destitute of a "soul tuned to such soft issues."

Workingmen, Professional Men, and Idlers.—

We find three distinct classes of men in the community, among the honest citizens, viz: the workingmen, or the laborers—the professional men—and the idlers, or gentlemen at large. The first are those substantial citizens, who earn their livelihood by the labor of their hands—by whom the earth is compelled to produce fruit, and by whom the productions of the soil are made subservient to the practical arts. The second class includes all those who get their living by their learning or their wits. It includes not only lawyers, clergymen and physicians, but likewise editors, merchants, schoolmasters and literary men in general. While the first are employed in managing the machinery of labor, or of agriculture and manufactures, and in providing for the corporeal wants of their fellow citizens—the second are employed in managing the machinery of society, and in providing for the intellectual, moral, and spiritual wants of their fellow citizens. The third class includes all idlers and gentlemen at large, whose words and works tend neither to increase the amount of substance or the amount of knowledge in the community—who are wealthy enough to live without labor of any kind, and who have not wit enough to enable them to take a part in the business of town or state, and who are obliged, therefore, to live in idleness, and rot out their existence like the old buildings on their premises. We would here protest against an error, which is often committed, which represents all men as idlers who do not earn their subsistence by the sweat of their brow. He who assists in providing for the moral wants, no less than he who assists in providing for the physical wants of society, deserves the approbation of his fellow men, in proportion to his industry and his ability.

A Filthy Case.—A man attached to the British schr Swin, who was rather more than "three sheets in the wind," fell from the vessel into the dock, near the head of City wharf, at dead low water, yesterday, while enjoying a comfortable snooze. He was dragged out by the spectators, a "leetle the nastiest critter that you ever did see," as Solomon Swap would say.—There is no doubt but he has got perfumed for the season, gratis.

"The Moreau" savours too much of personal pique—if a man chooses to have his picture painted and placed in the Artists' Gallery, let him do it—no matter how ugly his face, or empty his head.

New Hampshire.—A convention composed of the Democratic members of the Legislature, and delegates from such towns as are represented in the Legislature by Federalists, was held at Concord on Thursday evening, at which the Hon. ISAAC HILL was nominated for Governor of that State, and a resolution recommending him to the people for that office, UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED.

Important from Rhode-Island! The Question Settled!—The Federal Convention at Newport have nominated Mr. Webster for the Presidency, and the Providence Journal says the State will sanction the nomination. What a long tail, &c. &c.

The same Convention nominated Tristram Burgess and Henry Y. Cranston to represent that State in the 24th Congress.

The Fusiliers arrived at Providence yesterday morning, and were received by a volunteer corps, with whom they partook of a collation. They returned to Boston in the afternoon, coming as far as Roxbury in the Rail Road Cars, from whence they marched into the city a little past 8 o'clock, escorted by a cavalcade of citizens, under the command of Maj. Dennis, as Chief Marshal.

"The Cheapest Mechanics' Magazine in the World."—The price of the Boston Mechanic, and Journal of the Useful Arts and Sciences, has been reduced from $2 to $1 a year, in order to enable every journeyman and apprentice, as well as all employers, to take it. Messrs. Light & Horton spare no expense in rendering "The Mechanic" entertaining and useful, and we hope their enterprise will be rewarded by a liberal patronage.

A good change.—The Globe says—We are gratified to perceive that ROBERT J. WALKER, Esq., is appointed by the Governor of Mississippi to supply the vacancy which occurs by the expiration of the term of George Poindexter. This Executive appointment was rendered necessary by the refusal of the Senate of Mississippi to go into election at the last session.

The father of Pelham Orcutt, Jr. has published a card stating that he was authorized by the examining Justices to say that not the slightest testimony appeared against his son on the charge of burning T. H. Bailey's shop, at East Cambridge.

A wagon, loaded with bricks, and the horses attached to it, were precipitated into the dock at the Eastern Pier, yesterday—the horses were saved by cutting the harnesses. The team belonged to Malden.—Briggs.

"The hide and tallow of an old Ox."—The Portland Jeffersonian gives the following epitome of an amusing trial which recently occurred in Maine:—

"We notice in the Kennebec papers a sketch of a case which came before the Supreme Court at the late session in Augusta, and which must have given occasion for not a little amusement. The action was brought by Charity Vance, a girl of twenty-three, against William Vance, a veteran of seventy, for a divorce, with a separate maintenance. It seems the plaintiff married the defendant, in hopes thereby at some day to come into possession of a good share of his ample fortune, but not finding (as the reporter expresses it,) that "ecstasy of bliss" in the married state, which she anticipated, she soon prayed that she might be separated from him with alimony, for several reasons, not necessary to be mentioned here. On being asked previous to marriage, why she was about to unite herself to an old man like Mr. Vance, she replied—"The hide and tallow of an old ox would buy a young steer any time!" And the old man himself, near the close of the trial, remarked in relation to his marriage, that "it was all bargain and speculation from beginning to end." The report says that the court granted the plaintiff $100 to defray the expenses she had incurred, and $200 a year for maintenance until the further order of the court—that is, $300 the first year, and $200 yearly after the first year, payment to be made quarterly."

Spain.—Havana papers to the 14th inst. have been received. The Spanish packet Villanueva had just arrived there from Cadiz, in 29 days, bringing full accounts from Madrid to 2d of May. According to the official reports published, Gen. Valdes is carrying on military operations with great activity and success, and sanguine expectations are entertained that he will succeed in bringing the contest to a speedy close. As we stated on the 22d, it turns out that the affair of the Amazons arose from a reconnoitering party, sent out by Valdes preparatory to a general attack which he had in contemplation. The Madrid Gazette states that Zumalacarre lost in the skirmish 400 men and Valdes about 200.

New Orleans, June 10.—Robbery.—A person of genteel appearance calling himself Tarbuty, lately from Paris, but more recently from St. Louis, we understand, was apprehended for attempting to negotiate drafts, amounting to about $20,000 belonging to the Planters Bank of Mississippi, which with other drafts, amounting to about $60,000 had been inclosed in a letter directed to the Cashier of the Bank of Louisiana for collection. The original letter and some of the drafts were also found in his possession. The endorsement of the drafts had been altered. The letter was not post marked. We understand it is not yet ascertained how he obtained possession of the letter or its contents. A check for $1000 on the United States Bank, inclosed in the same letter had been presented and paid.

Confession of a Murder.—The Canajoharie Investigator gives the following extraordinary confession of a murder committed in Montgomery county:—

"It appears that Martin Silmer, the young man who was recently sent to the State Prison for life, for setting fire to the Johnstown jail, has since his commitment confessed himself guilty of murder. The person he murdered was the owner of a pair of horses which Silmer had in his possession last winter, and which he was suspected of stealing. He has designated the spot where he buried the body, and on examination, it has been found."

The Mass. Medical Society offer a premium of $500 to any person who shall actually within this Commonwealth, within seven years, breed and produce to the committee, the best sample of not less than one thousand wellgrown Leeches from a foreign stock, and equal for medicinal uses to the best imported leeches.

Trinity Church in Richmond burnt.—The editor of the Baltimore Patriot has a letter from Richmond, Va. which states that on Saturday morning last, 20th June, at half past 3 o'clock, the Trinity (Methodist) Church in that city was discovered to be on fire, and in the course of an hour or two, was burnt to the ground!

The rioters, who have afforded food for some of the presses for several days, are much cooled down. Several of the principal offenders have been secured, and we trust their trials will be any thing else but mock ones. The dignity of our laws must be sustained; if not, there is no public peace or safety.—N. Y. Gaz.

SOUTH BOSTON CELEBRATION.

The citizens of South Boston will celebrate the approaching Anniversary of American Independence, in a manner worthy that proud day, by an oration and public dinner during the day, and by fire works and bonfires upon the heights in the evening. A procession will be formed at 11 o'clock, on the southerly end of the old bridge, in the following order:—

Military Escort.
Aid—Chief Marshal—Aid.
Committee of Arrangements.
President of the Day.
Orator and Reader of the Declaration.
Chaplains of the Day.
Rev. Clergy.
Vice Presidents.
Invited Guests.
Officers of the General, State, and City Governments.
Officers and Soldiers of the Revolution.
Maj. General and Suit.
Brigadier and Suit.
Cols. of the several regiments of Artillery and Infantry.
Officers of Militia.
Members Military Corps in Uniform.
Subscribers to Dinner.
Citizens generally.

And move under escort of the Lafayette Guards, with the Brass Band, (a new corps, under the command of Capt. Kendall, being their first parade)—to the Baptist Meeting House, on Broadway, where the Declaration of Independence will be read, and an oration delivered by Dr. J. V. C. Smith; an original ode and an original hymn will be sung by the choir; after which, the procession will be re-formed, under the direction of the marshals, and proceed under escort to the beautiful and spacious Pavilion on Mount Washington, erected by the patriotic citizens of South Boston upon the very spot upon which Washington threw up the breast-work which caused the evacuation of Boston by the British troops, under Lord Howe, March 17th, 1776, where they will partake of a dinner, provided by Messrs. Holmes & Dodge in their best style. The citizens of Dorchester are invited to join in this celebration. The following gentlemen have been appointed to act as Marshals for the above celebration, viz:

John W. Ridgeway
Barnard Ford
E. F. Robinson
Wm. B. Brooks
John B. Badger
Samuel Kent
Wm. P. Hudson

An Expensive Saving.—A spice-merchant of Constantinople, carrying a piece of fine cloth to a tailor, desired to have a cloak and tunic made of it, and inquired if there was enough? The artist having measured the stuff, declared it was sufficient; and then requested to know "what had been the cost of it?" "Five sequins," replied the customer, "was the price; and considering the quality, that is not dear." The tailor paused for a moment—"I am a beginner in trade," said he to the spice-dealer, "and money is an object to me—give me two sequins, and I will show you how you may save three in this affair." "I agree," returned the other; and the two sequins were produced and paid. "It is well!" said the man of the needle, "I am a person of my word. This cloth has cost five sequins, and I have promised to save you three. Take it, then, to some other tailor, and Allah direct you to one of more experience; for I have never made such a dress as that you want, and if I attempt it, it will certainly be spoiled."—Balt. Gaz.

When, on the death of the Empress Catherine, Paul ascended the Russian throne, he went, accompanied only by his two eldest sons, the Grand Dukes Alexander and Constantine, to the castle in which state prisoners were confined, released Kosciuszko, and in the following words did homage to his virtues:—"I restore to you your sword, General, asking you to pledge your word never more to use it against the Russians." Kosciuszko is said to have declined the sword, saying, "I need none, having now no mother-land;" but pledged his word as the price of his liberty. The Czar then inquired whether the released prisoner would go? To which Kosciuszko firmly replied, "To America, where I shall find brothers in arms and glorious recollections."—Balt. Gaz.

Parisian Statistics.—During the last year there were born in Paris 29,130 children, namely—14,901 males, and 14,229 females. Of these 19,145 were legitimate; 18,685 of them being born in private houses, and 460 in the hospitals or almshouses; 9985 were illegitimate, 5473 of whom were born in private houses, and 4512 in the hospitals. Of the natural children 1170 were acknowledged by their parents. The deaths amounted to 24,177, namely—12,004 males, and 12,173 females. Of these 15,340 died in their own houses, and 8837 in the hospitals. The number of births exceeded that of the deaths by 4953. The marriages were 8088. In 1833 there were 27,460 births; 25,096 deaths, and 7938 marriages.

Fatal Affair.—On the morning of the 8th instant, a quarrel ensued between Peter Rooney, a sailor, and Hiram McClester, a boarding house keeper, about a settlement of a small sum of money. McClester struck Rooney a blow on the jaw, which fractured it in two places. He grew worse, and on the 12th inst. he went to the house of John Hammit, who did all for him that humanity could ask, but Rooney getting worse, was sent to the Pennsylvania Hospital on the 17th inst. and died on the 21st. McClester is in prison. Rooney has a wife and two children in New York. Verdict of Coroner's jury, that he came to his death by a blow on the jaw by McClester, which fractured it. Mortification set in, which caused his death.—U. S. Gaz.

The new steamer at Cincinnati, named Geo. Collier, is 185 feet long; 250 horse power—whole cost $85,000.

The body of the wretched criminal Bard, who it will be remembered, some weeks since jumped from a steamboat in the North River, while confined on board in irons, floated ashore at Germantown on Friday. It was identified by the heavy irons on the legs.

Navigation.—The Ohio is in good order for steamboats of all classes. Commerce is not quite so brisk on it, as a short time since, but still there is a fair amount of trade in operation.

Private letters from New Orleans, under date of the 26th of May, to gentlemen in this city, represent that place as being unusually healthy.

The number of buildings destroyed or injured by the New Brunswick Tornado, is about 180. Estimated loss, about $100,000.

Three cases of cholera and four deaths occurred at Maysville up to June 11th.

William Vansiver recently died at Williamsborough, N. J., from the kick of a horse.

A man at Ithaca, N. Y., recently lost one of his lips in a scuffle.
